Weft Sutra, by Philip Blackburn

Weaving a narrative, spinning a yarn, seems to be a human thing to do. Sometimes it's a story, sometimes an impression open to imaginative interpretation. Either way, we are kept rapt in the moment, dwelling in the patterns and colors as they emerge. In the case of Weft Sutra, I have set up the loom and provided technical guidance, and then let the weaver do his work. It may have something to do with my ancestral family background in the Cheney Brothers silk mills of Manchester, Conn.—the warp and weft of the looms that created such richly nuanced fabrics and textures. 'Sutra' in Sanskrit literally means string or thread; perhaps this is the magical force making the instrument sing or the ritual enactment of sacred harmonic worlds. The electric guitar has been touched before, but never by me. I wanted to approach it afresh, as much internal Tai Chi as outward sonic manifestation, as much scordatura hurdy-gurdy as ambient drone pleroma. The score is not written but delivered by instructional Youtube video. The oral tradition begins anew with each performance. This is how stories live and spread. I am grateful to Colin McAllister for requesting the work and bringing it to life with his whole body, intellect, and heart.

Artist Biographies

Christopher Adler is a composer, performer and improviser living in San Diego, California. His compositions encompass cross-culturally hybrid forms drawn from contemporary concert music and traditional musics of Thailand and Laos, the application of mathematics to composition, and the integration of improvisation into structured composition. He is a foremost performer of traditional and new music for the khaen, a free-reed mouth organ from Laos and Northeast Thailand. In 2020 he released Triangulations: New music for khaen, volume one, a CD of khaen solos by composers from around the world. He is a pianist with Nief-Norf and NOISE, an Affiliated Artist with San Diego New Music, a co-founder of the soundON Festival of Modern Music, and Director of Composition for the Nief-Norf Summer Festival. Philip Blackburn was born in Cambridge, England, and studied music there as a Choral Scholar at Clare College (BA, MA). He earned his Ph.D. in Composition from the University of Iowa where he studied with Kenneth Gaburo and began work on publishing the Harry Partch archives. Blackburn's book, Enclosure Three: Harry Partch, won an ASCAP Deems Taylor Award. He worked at the American Composers Forum from 1991 until 2020, running the innova Recordings label (which has been called “the nation’s premiere label for American new music”) – producing over 650 albums and garnering two Grammy Awards – while developing re-granting programs (notably the Jerome commissioning program and McKnight Fellowships). In 2020 he took over the Neuma Records label. PhilipBlackburn.com

Her music has been performed throughout the world, by some of the best orchestras and performers of new music, and she has held a professorship at UCSD, and was the first woman to be appointed as a composition professor at the University of Music and Performing Arts in Vienna, Austria (2006–2009), and at Harvard University, USA (2009 and on) where she has been the Walter Bigelow Rosen Professor of Music.
